

ARE MEN STRONGER THAN GOD?

Those who believe the Bible believe that God is all-powerful. “Is anything too hard for Jehovah?” (Gen. 18:14) anticipates a negative answer. Scripture refers to God as “Almighty” 59 times. Paul referred to “...the exceeding greatness of his power” (Eph. 1:19). Truly, the Bible abounds with claims of God’s omnipotence.

Paradoxically, in spite of these claims the Bible also reveals that, in at least one respect, human beings are more powerful than God. This statement is not intended to shock. I make it with absolute reverence for God and His might, for I have neither a blasphemous nor humanistic heart. Let us explore the background of this claim.

John Calvin, the 16th century reformer, perverted the Biblical doctrine of God’s omnipotence into his doctrine of the God’s “sovereignty.” To Calvinists, the sovereignty of God means the absolute and unqualified power of God through which He not only reigns supreme, but through which He forces His will arbitrarily and randomly upon mankind. This warped view of God’s omnipotence fuels the entire Calvinistic engine. Because of their doctrine of God’s “Sovereignty,” they aver that He:

- Brings every baby into the world totally depraved in sin and incapable even in adulthood of a pure thought or a good deed apart from a supernatural act of the Holy Spirit
- Unconditionally elected (i.e., determined, apart from any response of faith or obedience on their part) before the world began (i.e., predestined) every individual, personally, who would be saved and who would be damned
- Sent the Christ to die only for that limited number whom God had already arbitrarily and unconditionally elected to salvation, rather than for all mankind

- Imposes His irresistible grace upon those He has elected (i.e., they cannot be damned even if they should so choose)
 - Will see that they persevere unto eternal salvation because He will not allow them to be lost, regardless of the degree of their neglect, unfaithfulness, or immorality—if they are among the elect, they cannot be lost (i.e., it is impossible for them to apostatize)
- Calvin and his millions of disciples have it all wrong regarding God’s sovereignty.

Their theology deprives men of their free will, which God gave them from the beginning. God allowed Adam and Eve to choose to obey or disobey Him (Gen. 2:17) with the awful consequence of death if they disobeyed. God’s gift of man’s free will is a limitation—a qualification— He has imposed upon Himself. He gives every accountable human being the “power” to say “No” to His grace and salvation, so in this sense, God empowers men to be “stronger” than He is Himself. What glory would redound to God if we were all robots with no choice but to serve Him? It is only when men with multiple choices in life, choose to serve God, that our lives bring glory to our Creator and Savior.

Calvin’s view of God’s Sovereignty is evil. It makes Him a cruel and capricious ogre and us senseless puppets. Free will is precious, but woe unto those who wrongly exercise it and rebel against their Creator.
